

Coppersmithing came to America with the settlers. The now-traditional styles were developed over the years. Our kettles are strong and durable and suited for constant use. They are constructed of copper with silver and are food-safe.

The speciality pieces were adapted from pieces pictured in books printed in 1700's, 1800's, and 1900's. The coffee pot is from a 1700's book. The wash boilers were made before the turn of the century. The other pieces are based on commercially-made containers -- hand hammered and shaped.

The pieces are food-safe, but food should not be left in the vessel when cooking is completed. Tarnish can be removed with Wright's® Copper Cleaner.
